This is Toussaint, a French holiday. Yesterday and today, masses of French people follow the graceful custom of inclining themselves on their family graves.

The weather continues beautiful, and is becoming crisp in the mornings. The rains are frequent, but considerately reserve their efforts for the late afternoons and nights.

Mary Kuhn came to lunch.

Had a delightful walk with Sasha in the Bois. She is so companionable. Then, Sasha and I went to Versailles together and arranged wines in the cellar and garage. There are now about 4,000 bottles, [redacted]
